

What we are looking for

A WYA leader possesses the skills, attitude, and behavior that will effectively lead the organization toward accomplishing its goals and fulfilling its mission. There are several core competencies that we expect from our staff:

An effective communicator

Our staff engage with people from different cultures and stages of life. Effective communicators are not only skilled at clearly articulating complex ideas or training members, but are also empathetic; they make the effort to understand their audience in order to communicate and respond appropriately. Our most excellent staff have the ability to tailor their tone and craft their message with prudence. They are creative and confident in their ways to make their voices heard.

An efficient and organized leader

Staff are responsible for managing the region and its members. This means that as staff, you are able to prepare a systematic plan and implement a system that will efficiently get the work done without requiring supervision. You possess a keen eye for detail and exercise foresight which allows you to provide for possible contingencies. You also know how to delegate tasks to your team without overworking them.

An enthusiastic collaborator

Solidarity is an essential principle in WYA. As both a leader and team member, you value other people's ideas and make the effort to help those who need more guidance. You possess the openness to learn from others and possess the patience to engage with different personalities within and outside the organization. You know how to put others first and how to make them feel valued and respected.

A well-grounded professional

As staff, you value continual learning. You make the effort to enrich your knowledge about topics relevant to the youth and to our advocacy whether that be through self-study, attending workshops, immersions, research, or simply spending time with the people we aim to help. You actively gather insights about the youth of today—who are they? What do they value? How do we reach them?—and enrich your lectures by growing your knowledge about society and history.

A tech-savvy online citizen

Engaging with the youth on a daily basis means being able to keep up with the latest technology and digital trends. As staff, you are well informed and skilled in manoeuvring various professional software (MS Office, Adobe, and other similar programs) as well as social media and crowdfunding platforms. You are able to maximize traditional and modern technology in order to achieve regional strategic goals.

A discerning individual

WYA is an organization that educates, mobilizes, and inspires the youth to advocate human dignity and to defend the person through policy and culture. As staff, you are expected to practice professionalism. You are able to present yourself well at all times, recognize the importance of accountability, honor commitments, and possess a strong sense of purpose that empowers others to do the same.

Important Qualifications and Assessment for the Regional Director Vacancy

We are looking for applicants who possess a bachelor's degree (preferably higher) and at least two years of previous work experience in management, business development, community development, and/or other related work. Having prior professional experience in fundraising and possessing familiarity with the Asia Pacific region are an advantage. Fluency in English is required; knowledge of another Asia Pacific language is an advantage. Interested applicants must be available to work full-time at the Asia Pacific office in Manila, Philippines starting October 1, 2019, and must have completed (with excellent marks) the WYA Certified Training Program before the start date.
